

This new building has been majorly affecting my wellbeing in the last year and a half. You wouldn't believe all those sleepless nights I've had these past months, witnessing my two parents struggling to stay up till the morning, juggling work and writing these speeches every night and blindly knocking on doors for help. This school which mum and dad have invested 7 years' worth of love and money into has been using their wealth to destroy my home, my family, my mental wellbeing. If this school really cares about mental health stability to this level, would they really construct this monstrous, selfish five level building? Apart from this, I also want to raise concern for my future. Now that mum hates Pymble Ladies College, I may be moving houses. The reality is that we're not rich and none of you have seen how hard my parents work to be able to afford a 'good' education at Pymble. However, if these plans go as expected, the building will completely shadow our house, the price will decrease. It'll be harder than teaching a dog how to talk trying to sell this house and we may not have the money to buy a cat in the future which I've been begging for ever since I overcame my fear of them (when I was eight.) Well at the end of the day, this new building goes against all of Pymble's moral beliefs. We need to increase trees, increase empathy in wellbeing and increase the amount of logical staff members at Pymble Ladies College.
