This development should not be built so close to an existing rural town. With so much vacant land that is well away from where people reside, there is no reason why it should be so close to any town. The Southern Highlands should not be a dumping ground for Metropolitan waste. For ease of access, it should be located along the Hume Highway somewhere that will not impact any community. Surely there is no need for it to be built right on the edge of town. If it supposedly does not pose any health or environmental issues, then build it where the problem is, Sydney!
