I am totally opposed to any extremely huge incinerator (or even little ones) being built in the Sydney basin and in the middle of a populated area!

People do not want to breathe in pollution especially extremely toxic pollution! All the research shows air pollution causes health issues so why would we want to add to our already polluted air?

There are so many reasons why building this huge incinerator is just WRONG. I believe these huge incinerators are no longer being built in Europe due to research showing how harmful their emitted pollution is to our health. Why would we begin building them?

Why attempt to build it in a populated area? What about the effects on housing prices, businesses and again, health. There is a school not far from this intended site.

The pollution from this incinerator would affect the entire Sydney basin.

I thought this issue was done and dusted. I heard this incinerator idea had received a negative vote and would not be happening.

This incinerator is a very bad idea. Another solution will have to be found to deal with the garbage. A solution which does not include building something in suburbia which threatens the health and safety of a large community.
