It's an environmental travesty that a foreign owned company has somehow been able to buy rural land for their own gain - without heed or empathy for the views of a community who treasure where they live. This will be an eyesore - a Stephen King horror story like Mosquito Coast of noise, pollution, environmental destruction and community dismay and distrust that the proposed developers would not themselves want to wake up to each morning. How was this allowed to progress so far? Are we as landowners not considered? Who in this area would want to work there? Is this something we can be proud to point out? Go build it in an already established industrial area. Listen to the people. Our voice is entitled to be heard and respected.
