This can't happen here.

Whilst I appreciate the need for such a facility I am beyond words why it would be built in a country town that is desperately trying stay a country town with all the other pressure put upon it.

Why can't it be built on land off the Hume Highway (good transport links to Sydney and Melbourne) where no one lives? It has no business being next to a childcare center , housing and in a town with inadequate road infrastructure. It can't handle the traffic that's currently coming through.

Has anyone actually, physically been down here from Sydney or was it a matter of randomly pointing to a grid reference? I would be interested in knowing the truthful answer to this question.

Please please reconsider a location that is away from housing , centres where our children spend their formative years and towns in general.
